

Cemetery Records

The Utah State Archives holds records from many publicly owned cemeteries in Utah. Cemetery and burial records generally take two forms: records documenting ownership of plots (Utah Code § 8-3-1) and interment registers documenting burials within the cemetery.

For genealogical research, interment registers are generally of the most use. Information in records may include the name of the deceased, birth date and place, death date and place, burial date, cause of death, grave location, and names of relatives.

Burial records often give researchers information about individuals not always available in other records, and may serve as records of death prior to government-issued death certificates.

Locating Burials and Cemeteries

Most records from cemeteries are not indexed by name, outside of what may be found within individual record books. In order to find an individual burial record, researchers should know the place of burial and date. Sources for this information include death certificates, obituaries and death notices.

The Division of State History maintains the Utah Cemetery and Burials Database, an ongoing project to document burials within the state. Other sites that have indexed burials in Utah include Names in Stone, Billion Graves and Find a Grave.

The Utah Funeral Directors Association maintains a Utah Cemeteries Directory, including contact information and location for active cemeteries.

Locating Records

Most cemeteries in Utah are operated by municipalities, although some are operated by county governments, and it is common for unincorporated communities to create a cemetery maintenance district.

The following is a list holdings found at the Utah State Archives. The list is organized according to records series. The record series are arranged by county and then by the cemetery's governing entity.

NOTES:

The date ranges are recordkeeping dates for the records; researchers should consult the series' inventories for details on holdings at the Utah State Archives.

Also, this is not a list of the Utah State Archives complete holdings. If the records are not listed researchers should consult the series' inventories or speak with one of our reference archivists at the Research Center.
